The ordained individual is an instrument through whom divine grace may flow. Therefore, the Church emphasizes that when a priest is unworthy, we must recognize that he, as a person, is at fault, but that the sacraments are not damaged by him. All ordinations are performed by a bishop, who lays his hand on the person being ordained and prays for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit to fill the candidate with the strength and ability to worthily serve God's people. The laying on of hands is a sign of apostolic ministry—passing on the responsibility to spread the Gospel—just as Christ commissioned his apostles and they, in turn, appointed others as the Church spread throughout the world and throughout time. At first, the bishop was the pastor of a community and priests were those who assisted him in his work. Now priests are assigned by the bishop as pastors of parishes. They celebrate liturgies, teach, preach, counsel and minister to the faithful. No one receives the gift of the priesthood personally or individually. Apart from his bishop and his own particular parish community, the priest has no “powers”. Thus, on the altar table of each Christian community headed by the priest as pastor, there is the cloth called the antimension, signed by the bishop, which is the permission to the community to gather and to act as the Church of God. Without the antimension, the priest and his people cannot function legitimately, and the actions of the assembly cannot be considered as being authentically “of the Church.”

Next week we will end our look at the sacraments with the sacrament of the sick or ielejopomazania.
